office building in Paris to house MSA, NATO, etc., staffs. He wants to know whether the Department of State believes this space, amounting to about 200,000 gross square feet, would ever be necessary for the purposes of the Department, assuming MSA might some day be brought to an end. The answer to that question is no. In addition, I think it would be bad psychologically to erect such a structure in Paris, and call further attention to our swollen army of officials there. I am to take this up in London with Draper and Dunn.
